Another Convention Urged

(BY A. S. Stevens, M.A.)

An article in the Times with regret concerning the difficulties arising in connection with the Convention of the leaders of the Southern States, is a most eloquent reminiscence of the days of the Confederacy. It is always pleasant to see the Southern States, with their fine traditions and magnificent leadership, recalled to our mind. It is a pity that the Union should not have been preserved.

The Convention is now in session, and it is hoped that a decision will be reached before the end of the meeting. The delegates from the various states are meeting together in a friendly spirit. They are discussing the various points at issue, and are trying to arrive at a solution of the problem. The time is ripe for a settlement. The situation is pressing, and it is essential that the Union should be preserved. It is not too late to save the Union.

For centuries the Southern States have been noted for their fine traditions and magnificent leadership. They have always stood up for the preservation of the Union, and have always been ready to give up their interests for the good of the country. They are now ready to make another sacrifice, and to give up their interests for the good of the Union.

They are discussing the various points at issue, and are trying to arrive at a solution of the problem. The time is ripe for a settlement. THE HUMANITIES

(BY Harry Thompson)

The recent short story contest in this city of Dr. Rendall was not quite unnoticed, in spite of Mr. Grimmer's boasting. In any city of Center the visit of the head of the state is a matter of great interest. One or two public meetings were arranged to discuss the paragraphs written by the students. It was announced that Dr. Rendall was to be on hand to answer any questions that might be raised.

In later visits of reviewers should be asked to time their reviews and end with the final paragraph with a flourish. In fact, we should not be content with a review that is not marked with the author's name. It is not enough to state that the student has written a story. The reviewer should make it clear that the student has written a story that is worth reading. The student should be asked to explain the meaning of the story. The reviewer should ask the student to explain the meaning of the story. The student should be asked to explain the meaning of the story.

The real cause of the apathy among state electors is the utter absence of the right to vote. The great political parties have been unable to create a real interest in the election. The state is likely to be governed by the party that can promise the greatest relief to the people. This is not good government. It is not fair to the people.

Secondary Schools

It was stated that Dr. Rendall did not make a great mark on the life of this school. He has been here but three years, and it is too soon to make a judgment. He has not had the chance to settle down and interest in the school. The students are interested in the school. The students are interested in the school. The students are interested in the school.

Back Through the Ages

The South is nothing but a land of the past. There is nothing to back up the claims of the past. The people of the South are not interested in the past. They are interested in the present. They are interested in the future.
