EDUCATION AND PRACTICALITY

Dr. M. J. Redmond, in the interview recently reported in our columns, gave considerable weight to practicality in education. An expert on the subject, he has come to the conclusion that the management of the Coeil Rhodes Trust, and has behind them 30 years of experience at one of the greatest financial schools, has convinced him that the general discussion of question of the class of studies most likely to provide a sound education. He deplores the present overemphasis on mathematics which he has observed in other countries. While appreciating the importance of mathematics that to ensure great stability and citizenship, humanistic studies are essential in every university. He is of the opinion that a well-rounded education is of the utmost importance.
