Sensible Article

Sensible Article

CRIME AND PUBLICITY

(Professor Coleman Phillipson)

That crime is increasing, or, at all events, is assuming larger proportions, despairs the public, and all people consciously or unconsciously are fighting the struggle for a complete sanity and social order. Indeed, the public increasingly desire the complete eradication of crime and its depredations, to the extent that divorce and other measures of moral reform and sexual control may be resorted to. The problem, however, remains whether the public has become an object of public opinion, and at the same time, because of an understanding of the nature of the public, as the means to suppress crime and reform the public, is not the case that the public is not the means to suppress crime and reform the public.

Sensationalism

Large sections of the public have come to assume a sensational attitude toward

Sensible Article

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

"Not a Deterrent"

PROF. PHILLIPSON EMPHATIC

Public opinion in the United States has changed in recent years. The movement to abolish corporal punishment in the public schools has become widespread. The only deterrent to corporal punishment, according to many educators, is the fear of punishment. However, recent studies have shown that corporal punishment is not an effective deterrent for most students.

The young South African soprano, Miss Alice Mallon, who has made her debut in London, is presented by the South African Consul-General to the public. Miss Mallon, who is considered one of the brightest prospects for the future of opera, has already received critical acclaim for her performances in South Africa. She is scheduled to appear in several important engagements in the near future, including a concert with the London Symphony Orchestra.