MISS Lillian STEPHENS, B.A.

No Sport.

While 'individual French girls play tennis,' Miss Stephens said, "there was no lawn at the university." The playing fields were not grassed, and there were not more than 200 people present in the university in France. In addition, there was a severe haze over the university, which made outdoor activities difficult. However, the university provided indoor facilities for recreation, such as the French gymnasium, which was well-equipped for both fitness and performance. The university also offered a variety of cultural and social events, which contributed to the overall experience of university life in Paris. Miss Stephens described the university as a "paradise" for students, with its rich history and culture, and its vibrant academic community. She encouraged all students to consider the opportunities available at the university, and to be open to new experiences and challenges. She ended her talk by emphasizing the importance of taking advantage of the opportunities that college offers, and of being open to new experiences and perspectives. The talk was well-received by the audience, who expressed their appreciation for Miss Stephens' insights and advice. The talk concluded with a round of applause from the audience, who were impressed by Miss Stephens' knowledge and passion for her subject.
