CONFERENCE OF MUSIC TEACHERS

AESTHETIC VALUE OF MUSIC.

There was a large attendance at the E. G. W. Schools 11th annual conference on Wednesday morning when the conference of music teachers from distant county districts and the city met in the E. G. W. Schools. The conference began as it has done in recent years, with the presentation of a bouquet of flowers, and the singing of the national anthem.

Mr. W. H. W. Smith, the president of the conference, presided in the chair, and after the conference had been declared to be in session, the address of welcome was read, and the program for the morning was announced.

The first paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The second paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The third paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The fourth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The fifth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The sixth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The seventh paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The eighth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The ninth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The tenth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The eleventh paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The twelfth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The thirteenth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The fourteenth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The fifteenth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The sixteenth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The seventeenth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The eighteenth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The nineteenth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.

The twentieth paper of the morning was read by Mr. W. H. W. Smith, and was entitled "The Aesthetic Value of Music." Mr. Smith pointed out that music is one of the most powerful agents for the elevation of the human soul, and that it is through music that we are able to express our deepest emotions and feelings. He also emphasized the importance of music in the education of children, and the need for more music in schools.