UNIVERSITY EMPLOYMENT BUREAU.

The Council of the University of Adelaide has decided to establish an employment bureau for the benefit of students and graduates. For a long time means of bringing men with University qualifications into touch with those who required their services had been greatly needed, said the registrar (Mr. F. W. Eardley) yesterday. The American universities recognised the want long ago, and had developed this service to a remarkable degree. Melbourne and Sydney had also learned the importance of such a department, and there was no doubt that Adelaide would find it equally valuable. The bureau, which would be attached to the registrar's department, would be controlled by a board consisting of the vice-chancellor (Professor W. Mitchell), Professors E. H. Rennie, R. W. Chapman, and T. Brailsford Robertson, and Mr. E. W. Holden. Details of the method of its administration were now being prepared and would be submitted to the council for approval. It was hoped to prevent the waste caused by men drifting even temporarily into unsuitable or makeshift positions. Moreover, it had been found that the supply, when it was properly organised, did in a sense create the demand. It was expected, too, that employers by intimating what qualifications they were seeking in their experts would give a useful direction to students in planning their course of study. The leading industries of the State would be canvassed, and it was hoped by promoting the interchange of ideas between employers and the board that all parties would eventually be greatly benefited.

Mr. F. G. Holdaway, the newly-appointed assistant lecturer in zoology at the Adelaide University, took up his duties on Wednesday. He will be assistant to Professor Harvey Johnston. Mr. Holdaway, who is 23 years of age, was born in Queensland, and received his early education at the Brisbane Grammar School. He entered the Queensland University five years ago, and after a brilliant career graduated in science with honors in biology. This year he secured the degree of M.Sc. In the interim he entered the service of the Queensland Department of Agriculture, and was assistant to the Government entomologist. For the last 12 months he has been assistant to the Commonwealth Cotton Entomologist, and has paid particular attention to the growth of cotton in Australia. He has also lectured in biology at the Brisbane Technical College. Apart from his studies, Mr. Holdaway has taken an interest in sport. He was coxswain of the Queensland University crew for four years, and visited Melbourne, Adelaide (in 1922), and Sydney with them.

THE GENEVA PROTOCOL.

On Tuesday evening, at the Richmond Democratic Hall, Professor Darnley Naylor gave a lecture on the Geneva Protocol. He dealt with the "domestic jurisdiction" clauses, and contended that the position of Australia in reference to her immigration policy was much strengthened under the protocol. He showed also, how disarmament, security, and compulsory arbitration were inextricably bound together. He dealt with what he said were the only two criticisms of the protocol which could be regarded as deserving serious attention—one that the protocol stereotyped the status quo; and the other that the British Navy would be called upon to do more than its fair share in policing the world. With reference to the first criticism, he pointed out that while it was true that the status quo could not be changed by war, there was machinery provided under articles XIX., XI., and (in part) XV. of the covenant, to modify the decisions of the Versailles Treaty by discussion, conciliation, and agreement. Furthermore, the "minorities commission" of the League was already doing much to alleviate any hardships caused by the treaty, and it was significant that the four countries which might be thought to suffer more especially from the status quo—Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Poland—had all, in various ways, shown their whole-hearted approval of the protocol. Indeed, Poland had ratified it in her Parliament, through the votes of the German minority—a most striking fact. As for the second criticism, it sufficed to point out that under Article XI. of the protocol, each of the signatory States was called upon to do more than "co-operate loyally and effectively in support of the Covenant," in the degree which its geographical position and its particular situation as regards armaments allowed. Seeing that Britain was a member of the Council, and any military or naval recommendations required the unanimous assent of that body, it was clear that Britain ran no such risk as critics asserted, quite apart from the fact that each member of the League interpreted for himself the words "loyally and effectively." A discussion followed, and the lecturer was thanked for his address.

Lecture on Egypt

Illustrated with lantern slides, the first of a series of three lectures on Egypt will be given at the University of Adelaide tonight by Professor J. A. Prescott (professor of agricultural chemistry). The illustrations will include photographs of modern Cairo, depicting the housing methods and customs of the native Egyptians and Egyptian mosques. The lecture should be interesting in view of the fact that Professor Prescott has had much experience in Egypt.
