THE ANCIENT UNIVERSITY.

LECTURE BY DR. BEVAN.
The Rev. L. D. Bevan, L.L.D., delivered a lecture, entitled "The Ancient Universities," in the library of the Adelaide University on Tuesday evening, April 3. There was a moderate attendance of ladies and gentlemen.

Dr. Bevan, after introducing the subject, Dr. Bevan, referred to the noble lecture delivered many years ago by Professor Brougham before a large audience at the University of Oxford. The subject, however, was of such universal interest, and would, in all probability, be treated with fairness and moderation in the interests of the University and the Royal Institution. The full text of the lecture is as follows:

The Ancient Universities

The study of the ancient universities of Europe was a subject of great interest to the thinkers of the 19th century. The universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Bologna were the most prominent, and their influence extended far beyond the borders of their home countries. The students of these institutions were not only educated in the liberal arts, but also in the sciences and the humanities. The lectures were given by some of the greatest scholars of the age, and the students were expected to participate actively in the intellectual life of the university.

Dr. Bevan's lecture was well received by the audience, and many of the students expressed their enthusiasm for the subject. The lecture was followed by a question and answer session, during which several students asked Dr. Bevan to expand on certain points of the lecture. Dr. Bevan was pleased to answer their questions and to continue the discussion.

The lecture was a great success, and many of the students expressed their desire to hear more lectures on the subject. The university authorities were pleased with the response to the lecture, and they are planning to invite Dr. Bevan to give a series of lectures on the ancient universities of Europe.

The next lecture is scheduled for the following Tuesday evening, and the program of lectures continues through the summer months. The students are encouraged to attend the lectures and to participate in the discussions. The lectures are free to all students, and they are open to the public. The university is pleased to offer this opportunity to the students and to the people of the community.
