THE EDUCATION SOCIETY CONFERENCE.

Privileges of Citizenship.

The Church and the Home.

Mr. W. J. A. Cook says the great changes that have taken place in the social, commercial, industrial, and political life render a corresponding educational movement imperative. A well-balanced education is obtained by the value of girls' schools.

The annual conference of the Education Society was held at the Institute building on Saturday afternoon, when the report of 'The preparation of boys and girls for citizenship' was discussed. Mr. J. Gilmour, who presided, said public opinion on the education of children was unanimous. The highest benefits of citizenship had been won for boys and girls in the public schools, and the improvement in the public schools had resulted in the improvement of every boy for the sake of decency and character, and the employment of the ministry. The national schools were better in every way, and the attendance at them had been on the increase each year. The increase in the number of schools was due to the fact that they were at once as citizens of the nation, involved loyal, devoted, and honest work, and that they might improve our public schools. The attendance in the public schools had increased each year, and it was the training in the public schools that was the Conference's object.

The Law of Science.

There were several reasons why the public schools were of the greatest possible advantage to society, both commercial, industrial, and political. Education was the true and proper training of the mind, and the training in the public schools was a true and proper training of the mind. Hence the importance of the public schools. In the schools, the children were taught to think for themselves, and not to think for others. The private schools had no such training. They taught the children to think only for others. In the public schools, the children were taught to think for themselves, and not to think for others. A well-balanced education is obtained by the value of girls' schools.

Personal Responsibility.

The principles of the public schools should be applied in all schools, and in the training of the child. The child should be taught to be responsible for his own actions, and to respect the opinions of others. The training in the public schools should be applied in all schools, and in the training of the child. The child should be taught to be responsible for his own actions, and to respect the opinions of others. A well-balanced education is obtained by the value of girls' schools.

The Church and the Home.

The Church and the home are the twin pillars of education. They are the true and proper training of the mind, and the training in the public schools is a true and proper training of the mind. Hence the importance of the public schools. In the schools, the children are taught to think for themselves, and not to think for others. The private schools have no such training. They teach the children to think only for others. In the public schools, the children are taught to think for themselves, and not to think for others. A well-balanced education is obtained by the value of girls' schools.

The Church and the Home.

The Church and the home are the twin pillars of education. They are the true and proper training of the mind, and the training in the public schools is a true and proper training of the mind. Hence the importance of the public schools. In the schools, the children are taught to think for themselves, and not to think for others. The private schools have no such training. They teach the children to think only for others. In the public schools, the children are taught to think for themselves, and not to think for others. A well-balanced education is obtained by the value of girls' schools.

POLITICS AND CITIZENSHIP.

The Growth of Rights.

Professor J. McKerchar, when Mr. Donald B. Hughes, M.L.H., spoke of the political rights of women, said the political rights of women were now more than ever the subject of discussion. The growth of rights in the political sphere was due to the fact that women were now more than ever the subject of discussion. The growth of rights in the political sphere was due to the fact that women were now more than ever the subject of discussion. The growth of rights in the political sphere was due to the fact that women were now more than ever the subject of discussion.