FORESTRY IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

The recent cable message from London published in The Advertiser yesterday stated that the British Government is to create a new post of Under-Secretary of State for Agriculture in the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries. The new post is to be held by Sir George Murray, who is currently serving as the United Kingdom's representative in South Africa.

Mr. Murray has been in South Africa for several months conducting a survey of forestry conditions in the Cape Colony and the Transvaal. He has been particularly interested in the development of new forest products and the establishment of new nurseries. His report is expected to be completed in the near future and will be submitted to the British Government for consideration.

Mr. Murray's appointment has been welcomed by the local forestry community, who believe that his expertise and experience will be invaluable in guiding the development of the forestry industry in South Africa. His appointment is seen as a significant step towards the establishment of a strong and sustainable forestry sector in the region.

Mr. Murray's work in South Africa has been widely praised by both the local and international forestry community. His report on the forestry conditions in the Cape Colony and the Transvaal has been described as a landmark study that will be used as a reference point for future planning and development.

His appointment is also seen as a recognition of South Africa's growing importance in the global forestry industry. The country is home to a large and diverse forestry sector, with a range of products and services that are in high demand both in South Africa and internationally.

With Mr. Murray's appointment, the British Government is expected to provide increased support and funding for the forestry sector in South Africa, helping to accelerate its development and growth.

This is a positive development for the forestry industry in South Africa, who will benefit from increased investment and support from the British Government. It is hoped that Mr. Murray's appointment will lead to increased cooperation and collaboration between the two countries, helping to drive forward the development of the forestry sector in South Africa and beyond.
