Sir Joseph Verco Reminiscent.

Blackfellows in Botanic Park

Sir Joseph Verco, OBE, of the Royal Society of South Australia, makes some interesting remarks on Monday regarding the early days and accomplishments of that body.

In welcoming Dr. Clark Winter and Professor J. P. Enderby to the Aboriginal anthropologists on behalf of the society, Sir Joseph said that as he was unable to come to the meeting he sent his greetings to the Adelaide Philosophical Society, which was held in the house of Mr. J. L. Young, fire of the Queen’s Birthday (July 21) at 3 p.m., in a library, and had attended the meeting with Miss Verco.

At the meeting, the members of the council, President and woman, were present. The address was read, and the lady prevailed. At this, Miss Verco, the woman, stood up and spoke. She had the ability to speak, and did so with grace and eloquence.

Sir Joseph said that the meeting was an occasion of great interest to the society, particularly to those who were interested in the history of South Australia. He said that the society had been in existence for over 50 years, and that it was a great honor to be able to welcome the Aboriginal anthropologists to the meeting.

He said that the society had been working on the history of South Australia for many years, and that it had been able to collect a vast amount of information on the history of the country. He said that the society had been able to collect a vast amount of information on the history of the country, and that it had been able to publish many important works on the subject.

He said that the society had been working on the history of South Australia for many years, and that it had been able to collect a vast amount of information on the history of the country. He said that the society had been able to collect a vast amount of information on the history of the country, and that it had been able to publish many important works on the subject.

He said that the society had been working on the history of South Australia for many years, and that it had been able to collect a vast amount of information on the history of the country. He said that the society had been able to collect a vast amount of information on the history of the country, and that it had been able to publish many important works on the subject.

He said that the society had been working on the history of South Australia for many years, and that it had been able to collect a vast amount of information on the history of the country. He said that the society had been able to collect a vast amount of information on the history of the country, and that it had been able to publish many important works on the subject.