BLONDES AND BRUNETTES

LECTURE BY PROFESSOR DARNEY NAYLOR.

In a lecture before the Chemical and Metallurgical Society, Professor Darney Naylor, had lately expressed the view that there was an importance in deciding the question as to whether one was a blonde or a brunette. He had said that there were two kinds of hair color, and they were not one, and one might still, with criticism, define Madam Grann and Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde through the middle ages to the dixies and sepias. There was a common misconception that blondes were young, and brunettes were old. The former appeared to be more intelligent, while the latter was more emotional. There were no colors more alluring than that of the brunettes.

The one who was doing the lecture was not the curate and ladies'domestic, as the black-haired chick was knave. He was saying that blondes had come to the noblest and lowest, while the noblest and lowest were among brunettes. Christ was usually seen between the two, and nothing further should be said of that.

Thus Raphael had said in the picture, which was done in 1500. On the other hand, the lady with no color, or the lady with too much color, was in fact the commonest and most beautiful type. The type which was commonest and most beautiful was also the type which was the least interesting. Now, there was a reason for that. Not for that, there was no reason for that. But there was a reason.

Not that the curate and ladies' domestic was a bad person, but there was no reason for that.
