Dear Fisher,

The University of London has sent to me 10 papers of P. V. Sukhatme, Ph. D., which he has submitted for the degree of D. Sc. of London. I have read these once through, and am beginning a second reading. This letter is to give you my first impressions, which are in the main favourable. Some of the papers I had read before, especially those on combinatorial analysis of bipartitional functions. A few of the papers are light-weights, but five of them seem to be quite good.

I take it that I am to send on the papers and enclosures to you.
Most of the report is of a formal nature, but there is a section in which a statement of the grounds of decision is to be set out in several lines. Shall I perhaps append my signature in readiness on the form when I send it to you, enclosing separately a draft of my own grounds of decision, which you can modify as you may see necessary to do?

Of course your standard of D.Sc. in London may be higher than I imagine; but here in Edinburgh I think Sukhatme's work would be regarded as worthy. Yours sincerely, A. C. Aitken

Dear Aitken,

My letter evidently crossed yours. I have my own copies of Sukhatme's papers, but I think there is only one form of report, which is the one in your hands. I think your suggestion for dealing with that will be entirely convenient.

I wish I could think that there was anything that could be called a standard for the London D.Sc. The fact that I have seen absurdly bad theses successful is, of course, no excuse for approving of any more second-rate work, but in many ways Sukhatme's is certainly first-rate, and I am very glad that you are inclined to think well of it.

Yours sincerely,
