

January 17, 1940

My dear Araujo,

After a great deal of trouble with the College authorities, who were more than ordinarily stupid, I have been able to move my Laboratory and assistants out here to Rothamsted, where, as you know, I have my home. Stevens, Williams and Norton are all working here at Rothamsted. The conditions are not very convenient, but we can at least keep the department in existence.

I had heard that you were going to the United States. If so, I should be happy to give you introductions to several of the statisticians there, who might make your stay more enjoyable.

With best wishes to yourself and Mrs Araujo,

Yours sincerely,