

5th March, 1955.

My dear Luca,

It was delightful to hear from you again, and particularly I appreciate you having thought of me for your September meeting. I am not quite sure how long you suggest, or how many talks you would like me to give.

At the moment I am wrestling with the construction of a book on "scientific inference" on some of the subject matter on which I gave a series of about eight seminar talks recently in Calcutta. Probably the only point of interest for Biometricians lies in the clarification, especially from a historical standpoint, of the ideas occurring in the theory of mathematical probability on the one hand, and in tests of significance and statistical methods on the other. It is fairly intricate logically, though it need not be heavy mathematically.

With my respectful regards to Albamaría, and tell Matteo it is time I gave him a present if he can think of one.

Sincerely yours,
