Dear Fisher,

What I said about Guyer's book may be nonsense. But you will easily see.

I talked some nonsense when you dined here, as I remembered after. It is when one quality can be changed independently of others that selection may be rapid. Neggins may vary in blackness, i.e. more black and i½ lighter, and selection can pick freely between them as blackness is not tied to any other quality as regards utility. The Selection is an old trick, quicker if the quality depends on one factor. But that is another matter. The change in features due to a change in ductless glands may be regarded as one quality in this sense, and it is natural that such differences should exist between races, I think.

Yours, etc.

L.D.
