7th February, 1955.

My dear Daniel,

I have been wondering whether the small emolument of £25, which we have available in this department for an annual lecture, would suffice to make it worth your while to make a visit to Cambridge sometime this summer. Our so-called Master Term, chiefly in April and May, has all the main examinations, so that many of the young men are somewhat pre-occupied; none the less, I think that the first half of May would be a perfectly suitable time, as indeed would be most of July. These are also about our best months for weather, but you know what to expect of England in this respect. I think the fee ought to cover travelling expenses, and if you cared to stay as my guest in college for two or three nights, there would be little or no living expenses.

I hope you will give the matter consideration, since it would be the greatest pleasure to me to see you again and introduce you to some of my friends, old and young.

Sincerely yours,
