2nd February, 1954.

My dear David,

I think it would be fairly easy to persuade me to visit Oxford and talk to your department. If I remember rightly I have not had that pleasure before. Though the difference is but slight, I think I should prefer the phrase 'inductive inference' to the term 'fiducial inference' which you suggest. It may be worth indicating so far as one can distinctly, just where the line of approach adopted rather hazily by Neyman and more distinctly by Wold, differs from a genuine induction.

Sincerely yours,
