December 11, 1946.

My dear Ron,

I do so greatly appreciate your kindness in thinking of me and inviting me as your guest at the first College Feast after the war. I do so particularly wish I could have accepted, but on January 9 I shall be in America.

Though the card you have so good as to send me is headed "The Master and Fellows," I assume that this letter to yourself will suffice, and that it is not necessary to send also an official reply addressed to The Master and Fellows.

I am going to fly to America on December 28.

20 Zones in the air. I am returning by Sea, leaving New York about January 15.

In celebration at Princeton, for which I have been invited, and on January 6th, but having got to America, it would, I think, be a good pity not to see just a little more of the country; indeed, to return at once would seem a foolish waste of a good opportunity. So I hope to stay about 10 days there afterwards.

You may remember I mentioned
this to you when you were with me, and you were so good as to say that you could send me an address or hint of someone to whom I could write in the hope of seeing something of the work at one or two centres, in addition to Princeton, not too far from New York.
I should be so grateful for an address or hint if you think it would be appropriate to write.

Again with my most grateful thanks for your particularly kind invitation, which is do to much with I could accept.

Yours ever,

[Signature]