Dear Sir,

Smoking & Lung Cancer

In all the publicity given to this subject I find no reference to what seems to me to be the most important factor -- inhalation.

About 3 years ago my attention was drawn to a report in "The Practitioner" of research on smoking undertaken by a South African doctor. He found that inhalers absorbed 92.1% of the volatile nitrosamines, non-inhalers 6.4%.

As the orthodox medical attack is only upon cigarettes, and as a majority of cigarette smokers inhale, is this not likely to be the critical factor?

Yours faithfully,
