

5th February, 1955.

My dear Kettlewell,

Thanks for sending me your paper, which I am now returning. I do not know what I should criticise in it, unless, perhaps, that you could refer more specifically in the conclusions to the particular numbers on which they are supported. If you are free, I hope you will lunch with me on Wednesday, or if you are only free later, come up to the department at 4.0 for tea.

If you can lunch, I may be a little late as I am lecturing from 12.0-1.0, and probably would not reach the Blue Boar before 1.15. That, however, would be the nicest way if you are free.

Sincerely yours,

Enc.
