Dear Fraser Roberts,

Thanks for letting me see your treatment of the variation of variance with age in your intelligence test scores. The whole example seems to me one of great interest and I only hope the treatment which you have developed, and for which you are kind enough to give me credit, does fulfil the really important function of enabling people to think intelligently about the data, which is a stage more advanced than merely that of enabling people to see how such data should be treated.

Yours sincerely,
