Dear Todd,

I am enclosing one from Leopold Martin which I hope you will return, and which explains what he has been doing by way of laying an administrative foundation.

I think such a pamphlet as you suggest would be useful to many physicians who wish to hear both sides of the case, and certainly many have written in from Germany and the United States. My invitation to speak at Liverpool was perhaps an indication that thought is not dead in this country either. However, so far as influencing the opinion of the medical profession is concerned, there is no doubt that the M.R.C. Statistical Research Unit have gained a head start and that many will be resentful at hearing any views differing from those which they are trying to impose. Among scientists, on the other hand, there is certainly by now much less prejudice.

Sincerely yours,

Enc.

G. F. Todd, Esq., O.B.E., M.A.
