5th June, 1935

Professor E.B. Wilson,
School of Public Health
Harvard University,
Van Dyke St.,
BOSTON, Mass.

Dear Professor Wilson,

You will remember my writing to you on May 20th, giving a criticism of a paper by W.E. Deming. I have since heard from the author, inquiring, in effect, what criticisms I should make of the paper. I am inclined, therefore, to send him a copy of my letter to you as the most obvious, candid course; but it has occurred to me that I ought first to enquire of you whether you would prefer that I should write him, as I easily could, an independent paraphrase.

Yours sincerely,