England Elsewhere: Edward Gibbon Wakefield and an Imperial Utopian Dream

Michael Radzevicius

Thesis Submitted for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy
Politics Department
School of History and Politics
University of Adelaide
January 2011
Table of Contents

Abstract iv
Plagiarism Declaration v
Acknowledgements vi

Introduction 7

Chapter One

Edward Gibbon Wakefield and the British Settler Empire 15
Wakefield’s life and works 15
Critical reception 18
Changing views towards emigration 23
The theory of systematic colonization 27
Approach and scope 33

Chapter Two

Theories and Definitions of Utopia 36
Western utopian literature: a long tradition 36
Generic distinctions 42
Utopia and practical politics 46

Chapter Three

Utopia in the Nineteenth Century 50
Nineteenth century utopias 50
Utopia and Socialism 53
Reform, not revolution 57
Religion and utopia 60
Plans: the stamp of utopia 63
The British Empire and utopia 66
South Australia and New Zealand: imperial utopias? 69

Chapter Four

Systematic Colonization: A Perfect Theory? 76
Systematic colonization and colonial troubles 77
An appeal to all classes? 85
Solving the domestic crisis 93
Universal applicability: a perfect theory? 95

Chapter Five
Utopia in South Australia 99
A Letter from Sydney: the blueprint for utopia? 100
South Australia: a transplanted Britain 107
Ideal Colonists 109
Agriculture, not pastoralism 111
The role of religion 113
Perfect Britains 114
The benefits to Britain 115
Utopian dreams of other colonial promoters 118

Chapter Six
New Zealand: Racial Integration and an Anglican Utopia 125
New Zealand: a brighter Britain 126
The British and the Maori 130
Canterbury: an Anglican utopia 135
Utopia in New Zealand: a broad discourse 143

Chapter Seven
Edward Gibbon Wakefield and the Western Utopian Tradition 147
Utopia: a new society? 147
Colonies as examples of perfection 150
Radical difference 154
Pragmatism, not idealism 156
Does utopia need to be normatively acceptable? 165
Conclusion 169

Bibliography 173
Abstract

British colonial reformer Edward Gibbon Wakefield (1796-1862) is most widely known in scholarly literature for the role that he played in the planning, promotion, and establishment of the British colonies of South Australia and New Zealand. Always a controversial historical figure, Wakefield’s career as an advocate of British imperial expansion is a subject that continues to challenge modern scholars. Some view him as a contemptible, deluded capitalist visionary who had little practical impact upon the political landscape of his day. Others argue that his advocacy of a regulated, ‘systematic’ form of colonization provided the impetus for the rapid increase in British emigration to Australia and New Zealand in the 1830s and 1840s. What is common to almost all of the scholarship on Wakefield’s life and works, however, is the view that his plans to colonize South Australia and New Zealand were attempts to create an ideal, utopian colonial society. The utopian qualities of Wakefield’s works have been especially recognized in the historical literature of New Zealand. In general, however, his works have been assessed in the context of colonial and imperial history, rather than as an important contribution to Western utopian literature. With its modern genesis in Thomas More’s Utopia of 1516, the canon of Western utopian literature is large and has received extensive scholarly interest and investigation. Although utopian thinking is a multifarious literary and theoretical tradition open to diverse interpretations, there is nonetheless a readily identifiable canon of texts and authors that scholars have categorised as being ‘utopian.’ Wakefield’s works are generally excluded from this canon and it is this gap in the intellectual history of the Western utopian tradition that this thesis addresses.
Plagiarism Declaration

This work contains no material which has been accepted for the award of any other degree or diploma in any university or other tertiary institution to Michael Radzevicius and, to the best of my knowledge and belief, contains no material previously published or written by another person, except where due reference has been made in the text. I give consent to this copy of my thesis, when deposited in the University Library, being made available for loan and photocopying, subject to the provisions of the Copyright Act 1968. I also give permission for the digital version of my thesis to be made available on the web, via the University’s digital research repository, the Library catalogue, the Australasian Digital Theses Program (ADTP) and also through web search engines, unless permission has been granted by the University to restrict access for a period of time.

Date:                             Signature:
Acknowledgements

Given the size of what is to come, my acknowledgements will be brief but hopefully no less comprehensive for their brevity. Firstly, I would like to thank my primary supervisor Paul Corcoran for his support and guidance throughout my candidature, especially during my increasingly regular ‘paranoid’ moments in 2010 and 2011. The comments that my secondary supervisor, Ian Hall, provided on the thesis as a whole were of great assistance in enabling me to complete my work. None of this would have been possible without my family, and to them I offer as much thanks as 12 point font can provide. My friends and peers at the University of Adelaide and other institutions provided invaluable support and advice over the last four years, and I would like to thank Nathaniel Enright, Nicholas Wilkey, Alan Goldstone, Guy Richardson and Jessie Edwards for their proof reading skills, and patience in listening to my incessant patter. Thanks also to Courtney Guy for dealing with my ‘diva’ moments so effectively in the last months of my candidature.